Natascha Diekmann & Michaela Haslinger	Shopping for a better world?	Consumption is an inherent part of Western world. Nearly every day we buy things, nearly every day we throw away others. What hides behind the world of shopping? How is welfare linked with consumption? How does the aspect of globalization manipulate this relationship? Many questions are tied with the problem: „How fair can shopping be?“
Sven Dietl & Emil Nefzger	Euro in crisis	Austerity, European versus national budgetary policies, global crossholding of economy and economics are affecting the stability of the Euro. Alternative solutions, replacing the current bail out programs and cuts are to be created and linked with ethical aspects like commitment with neighbours. What can we do?
Natalie Dannik & Christian Döllinger	Hatred of foreigners and integration	How important are solidarity and responsibility towards foreigners, immigrants, refugees and asylum seekers? We will analyze the current situations for these people in the member states of European Union. How effective are programs like Triton or Mare nostrum? Which alternatives regarding criteria of asylum can be found? What can be done to improve the situation for the refugees from Near East countries?
Laura Alzola & Paul Röttger	The daily occupation of your life	- Is 'I work, therefore I am', the new mantra of our time? What defines you, what defines your daily occupation? Which came first the chicken or the egg, your life or your CV? A questioning attitude towards what moves young people in today's Europe.
